FORBES FEATURES 'FLYING FARMER'

A drone for pesticide treatment, it enables farmers to detect weeds and pesticide treatment required

In a coverage by 'Forbes India' on the 'Innovations built to help farmers,' the novel invention of Vertos, the 'Flying Farmer,' got featured. It's not the first time that Vertos have come up with their unique innovations; now and again, LPU continues to achieve fame for its novelties that contribute to society.

FLYING FARMER

A drone for pesticide treatment developed by 45 students and 5 faculties at LPU is a unique approach that enables farmer to detect weeds and pesticide treatment required. These pre-programmed drones may further target particular areas on the field and spray pesticides, resulting in 85% pesticide preservation. Currently, in the testing phase, the drones have an air time of 25 minutes. And are programmed with machine vision algorithms and infrared sensors, which can also detect the precise location of weeds and send information promptly to the farmer.

AI-BASED INTERFACE TO DETECT COVID-19 FROM X-RAYS

Researchers at LPU have developed an easy-to-use cloud-based web interface powered by artificial intelligence (AI), which can detect COVID-19 quickly from radiology reports such as CT scan or X-Rays.

The system will help doctors and medical staff even in remotest villages of the country to get quick results on the Covid-19 status of a patient. "We wanted to build a cloud-based system which could be accessed at minimal costs even from the remotest possible locations in the country while ensuring high quality results," said Prabin Kumar Das, a B Tech student at LPU.

A study published in the journal Radiology found that chest X-ray scan features can aid in the early detection and diagnosis of the virus.

The interface developed by researchers at LPU is cloud-based and does not need any high-tech device or technicians to operate. It can be accessed by an authorised healthcare professional anywhere in the world via a basic mobile device with internet connectivity and a web browser, they said.

The portal is capable of hosting any AI model that is preferred by a hospital, and will accordingly be able to detect the infection as well as the extent to which it has affected the patient, they said.

KAWACH: a pendant that will ensure social distance in crowded places

Prabin Kumar Das, a B Tech student (Electronics Communication and Engineering) at Lovely Professional University (LPU) along with his professors has developed an IoT device called KAWACH' to promote safe social distancing. The device, when worn as a pendant, vibrates and glows in case someone breaches the user's safe space of 1 metre.

Apart from that, the device is equipped with a handwash reminder that beeps every 30 minutes to remind the user to wash his or her hands, as well as a temperature sensor that alerts them via an SMS in case their body temperature crosses the prescribed limit.

The team of professors that worked on the project include Dr. Lovi Raj Gupta, Executive Dean of Science and Technology, Dr. Rajesh Singh, Professor, School of Electronics and Electrical Engineering, Dr. Anita Gehlot, Associate Professor, School of Electronics and Electrical Engineering and Dr. Varun Panwar, Assistant Professor, School of Mechanical Engineering.

Vertos develop 'Covid-19 Sanitization Pod'

Vertos display their Covid-19 Sanitization Pod

Keeping people's safety in mind especially during Covid-19 times, researchers at LPU came up with a unique 'Covid-19 Sanitization Pod', which can help in preventing the spread of the virus.

Ideal for places with high footfalls, in this tunnel-based pod, there are automated doors at the entry that host a thermal camera to notice the body temperature of the particular person who is entering into the tunnel.

If the temperature of the person entering the tunnel is above 98-degree centigrade it will inform the doctor immediately and the turnstile would not open.

To disinfect each person, it will take 8/10 seconds. The total cost incurred in preparing the prototype sums up to 1.10 lakhs but to bring a fully-fledged model for installation, it will cost about 1.50 lakhs.

TILL I SET MYSELF FREE...

You ever just wanna breathe
so loud
That you stop hearing
everyone else
Out on the sidewalk, your ears are ringing
The walk is out of step, but your blood is running
And the syllables spill out of your mouth and;

And, then the tired legs walk
you back home
Home, where breathlessly
you - Lose your sleep for one more night.
Home, where endlessly
You live for the day, worship
the light.

When it gets too close to the swimming
The strokes of your arms pull
you down
You tire yourself out from saving yourself and, say goodbye
These teary eyed departures
Like staying on the call

For that extra second before he hangs up -
What are you wishing for this time?
Blinking away in the fade of
the hour;
Haunted days of the fairytale
failures.
What is keeping you awake?
Another bark off the old tree,
How long do I walk, another
mile?
Till I set myself finally free.

What is keeping
you awake?
Another bark off
the old tree,
How long do I
walk, another
mile?
Till I set myself
finally free.

- Radhika Dey

To live for others!

Isn't it amazing how people have the capability to fight for others, including complete strangers.

Like the fact that we have multi-national hospitals with all the science put together, just to help each other, the idea of surgeons in those hospitals who'd have 30+ hour surgeries
to save one life.

Firemen running into a burning building and training for the possibility of it ever happening.
People volunteering to help in a country they've never been after a natural disaster, expecting no money in return for their kindness.

Even if you think you are unloved, your life will always be considered worth saving, if not by those around you then by the surgeon, the fire fighter,
the paramedic, the volunteer,
the eye-witness who's hell bent on not losing you.

- V.Priyadarshini

Even if you think you are unloved, your life will always be considered
worth saving,
if not by those around you then
by the surgeon,
the fire fighter...
