A lockdown experience on maternal bond through a movie called "ROOM"

It's been rightly said "A mother is a walking miracle; her love is magical which I think no poet or artist could ever portray it or describe it through paintings and poems.

Her love is so pure and selfless that sometimes I wonder that how can someone be so benevolent and self-sacrificing, it's just beyond my imagination".

So, amid these pandemic times, I watched a wonderful movie "ROOM" with my mother. It is an old web series released in 2015 but now available on OOTD platforms. It is directed by Tommy Wiseau. The movie is based on a girl who gets kidnapped, confined to a tiny room and raped and after 2 years she gives birth to baby boy, who becomes her light of hope to get out of this hellhole. The movie is so beautiful that it just wrenched my heart. Me and my mother both cried at least twice while watching it.

The movie also conveys this message that a mother will not even think twice for putting her life in danger, in order to save her child's life. In the movie the child's name is Jack, who is unaware of the fact that there is a big world outside the tiny room in which they live. The kidnapper never used to take them out and has locked the door using password protection so that there is no chance they could escape out. The movie is an absolute masterpiece and one of the most under-appreciated films of Modern era.

This movie was worth watching amid lockdown and for instance, it goes well with the theme.
